WHEELING, AUGUST 20, 1889.

PERSONS going out of town for the summer can have the DAILY INTELLIGENCER mailed to them for 15 cents per month. The address of the paper will be changed as often as desired.

The oil development in West Virginia has fairly begun, and in a few weeks the excitement will be at its height.

The INTELLIGENCER'S Terra Alta dispatches do not please those Democrats who are in sympathy with the peculiar methods which the dispatches expose.
That is not at all surprising.

The New York Press publishes a lengthy article showing the need of a National divorce law. The dissimilarity of the divorce laws of the country has given rise to no end of family complications.

It begins to look as though the G. A.
R. Encampment at Milwaukee will be a big success after all. Some of the railroads are showing signs of weakening, and coming down to the cent a mile basis.

Another tenement horror in New York City. It carries with it the same moral that all the balance have carried.
The average New York tenement house is nothing more than a death trap.
When the death traps are done away with the horrors will cease.

To the Countess and Countess Edition, of Menlo Park, U. S. A.: The whole country tips its hat to you. Not because, by the grace of the King of Italy, Mr. Edison has been raised to the nobility, but because as plain Tom Edison, the greatest American inventor, he deserves honors, of whatever character, from the nations of the world.

DEMOCRATIC papers affect to see in Secretary Windom's expression in favor of a revision of the tariff laws, an adoption of Democratic doctrines. Secretary Windom, on the contrary, is far from that sort of thing. He believes, with the Republican party, that the tariff needs revision, but he does not propose to abolish its protective features, as the Democratic party would have it.

REPORTS from the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the cities of Milwaukee and San Francisco for the month of July show the rates of mortality to have been 14.6 and 14.3 respectively; this against a rate of over 18 in Wheeling for the same period. Yet the chairman of the Council Committee on Health coolly stated at a meeting of that committee that Wheeling was a good average city, so far as her health was concerned.

The Pestilent Sparrows.
Last Sunday evening a number of persons sat on the green sward at the gate end of a venerable old stone manor that stands a few miles east of the city, their attention was attracted to the immense number of sparrows that came circling in from every quarter of the heavens to find lodgment for the night amidst the dense foliage of the grape vines that so thickly overspread the old gable as to make it look like a wall of green rather than of stone. The air seemed perfectly alive with these birds.
They came twittering and chattering to their copse, making a noise that overshadowed the conversation and almost drowned it, as if each and every one of them was delivering a parting message for the night to its fellow.

After a vast flock of them had thus restored themselves for the night under the leaves and on every twig of the vines, a visitor clapped his hands violently several times, making a noise that on the quiet evening air sounded sharply, when, presto, the air was once more alive with sparrows, as legions of them took flight and flight, and they fairly darkened the twilight with their out-spread wings, while their excited chatter was, if anything, more paroxysmal and bewildering than ever. It was really a sight to behold and a noise to listen to.

After circling the air once more for a circlet of several hundred yards, and seeing no sign of a man with a gun in hand, they began alighting on the tree tops nearest the house, as if to review the situation, and the bedlamish chatter went on with great vigor, alayed only by their gradual segregation as detachment after detachment returned to the grape vine copse on the wall of the gable.

It is not necessary to say how many times the clapping experiment was repeated nor how wearisome at last became the gentle roar of the suddenly invaded air as they sallied forth each time to see what this disturbance of their rest really meant.

Those who inspected the vines under the foliage could see how these pesti-ferous little lodgers found not only rest but food beneath the foliage. Every half ripened grape was a target for their relentless and gorged themselves.

Naturally these abounding little pirates became the subject of conversation, and the wonder was, first, what they were created for, and second, being created, why they were ever imported into this country from England. All their English bull dog proclivities were discussed; their propensity to attack and drive out all other birds; their uncanny habits on the roofs, the eaves and the window sills of houses, and, in short, their unendurable and positive intolerance as tenants and familiars in every point of view. It was agreed that unless something was done—a price set on their heads—a Herod decree of some kind promulgated against them—a Borgias with poison in her hand sent against them—they would become a nuisance in this country equal to if not surpassing the rabbit nuisance in Australia.

Going out that same road during the progress of the wheat harvest, the writer of these lines observed in the field just this side of the old Stearns mansion myriads of these omnivorous and pesti-ferous sparrows deprelating on the shocks of gathered grain. There they sat, not like the silent and passive and harmless raven, that perched on the "pallid bust of Pallas," but like live, saucy and nifty little imp of prey, filling their insatiable craws with the golden grains, for which they had killed not only the grain, but also the poor husbandman as relentlessly as did the wild vandals of the North Sea coast the poor Saxon in the land from which they came.

Paraphrasing we may observe that we suppose these sparrows are an evolutionary product of those same vandals, and that having conquered England they have come over to occupy the land on this continent.

But, seriously, what is to be done with these sparrows? Some time ago the United States Department of Agriculture made a report of a very startling and portentous character in regard to the rate at which they are multiplying.
Their fecundity has no parallel in the records of feathered bipedism. Here, for instance, is an extract from that report that ought to attract attention.

"In the latitude of New York and southward it hatches, as a rule, five or six broods in season.
The first brood is laid in the first week of
